

CONTRIBUTORS

Earl J. Baker is Assistant Professor of Geography at Florida State University, Tallahassee, Florida 32306. His research has dealt primarily with the behavioral, economic, and institutional aspects of natural hazards. He is co-author with Gordon Mchee of Land Use Management and Regulation in Hazardous Areas and is a collaborator with Gilbert White and others on Natural Hazards Management in Coastal Areas.

Dr. Hirotada Hirose is an associate professor of psychology at Tokyo Woman's Christian University in Japan. His research and publications deal with political behavior, political socialization and collective behavior. He is co-author of the just published in Japan, Social Psychology: Phenomena of Collective Behavior.

John J. Theoret, M.D. is Director of Emergency Services at The Memorial Hospital, Pawtucket, R.I. and Assistant Professor of Community Medicine (Emergency) Brown University, Providence, R.I. Prior to coming to the United States, he was Chairman of the Emergency Disaster Planning Subcommittee of the city of London, Ontario from 1972 until 1976. Since arriving in the U.S. he has been Chairman of the Emergency Disaster Planning Subcommittee of the city of Pawtucket, R.I. from 1977 until the present. He has been actively involved in setting up two major disaster exercises and was involved with a major snow storm in 1978.

One of his major interests is in methods of improving mass casualty care in disaster situations.