

CONTRIBUTORS

Dr. Guido Barbina is an instructor, Facoltà di Lingue e Letterature Straniere, Istituto di Geografia, Università degli Studi, Udine, Italy. He has conducted cultural geographical research in northern Italy, Tunisia, and Iraq.

Dr. Frederick L. Bates is a Professor, Department of Sociology, University of Georgia. He did research on community response to hurricanes, and published several works on ethology and role theory. His principal research was in the United States.

Dr. Jean Copans. Centre D'Etudes Africaines, Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales, Paris, France. His research interests are on economic development and on labor organization in West Africa.

Dr. Maxine I. Margolis is an associate Professor at the Anthropology Department, University of Florida, Gainesville and has conducted research on social and economic change in Brazilian peasant communities.

Dr. George P. Osterling is an instructor, Catholic University, Lima, Peru. His research work includes studies in rural—urban migration among Andean farmers in Peru. He served as an administrator on native lands in Amazonian regions of Peru.

Dr. Robert Tonkinson is an associate Professor, Department of Anthropology, University of Oregon. His research has dealt with social organization and change among tribal populations of the New Hebrides and Australia.

Dr. William I. Torry is a Research Fellow, Department of Anthropology, University of California, Berkeley. He did drought adjustment research with the Navajo (Arizona) and several herding societies in southern Ethiopia and northern Kenya.

Mr. Michael Watts is a doctoral candidate, Department of Geography, University of Michigan. He did two years of fieldwork research on famine adjustment among the Hausa peoples of Nigeria.